APA Citations

6th Edition
When researching many of your resources will come from journal articles.

If you utilize a journal article you found through the library’s databases or found online, you must tell the reader where you found the article.

Most electronic articles today will have DOI numbers

- DOI stands for Digital Object Identifier
- Newspaper articles and popular magazine articles found through the databases or online will usually not have a DOI number 6th Edition APA - when citing journal articles must include the DOI number.

- If item does not have a DOI number, you must cite the URL of the homepage of the journal

REMEMBER: If the article does not have a DOI number, you want to search for the URL of the homepage of the journal.
